MSc MASTER OF SCIENCE

Exploring sustainable logistics innovation

"The international dimension is central to all the courses delivered, giving a thorough understanding of the commercial and strategic issues involved in logistics worldwide. The study of modes of transport, international trade and supply chain management, warehousing, customs and information systems are all central to the curriculum. The maritime aspect is a key component of the different modules, as are sustainability issues, now a major challenge in global logistics. Graduates can look forward to highly specialised careers in trade, logistics and transport worldwide."

HIGHLIGHTS

COMPREHENSIVE, INTERNATIONAL APPROACH

A global vision is outlined for addressing the sector as a whole. It is based on 3 main pillars: international trade, international transport and logistics. This sector-based approach takes students along a strategic path, allowing them to meet the major challenges facing international businesses in the field. Graduates will be equipped with the skills needed to analyse complex business issues and operate effectively in trade and logistics organisations worldwide.

EXPERIENCE-BASED TRAINING

70% of the instructors and speakers involved are recognised industry professionals. They ensure hands-on learning, in line with the expectations of recruiters in this demanding market. All the modules call on highly specialised skills acquired through practical projects: professional conferences, CCEF certification, study trips in the field, part-time internships for immersion in companies, case studies, company projects, presentations and group works submitted to professional juries.

2 STRATEGIC FOCUSES

As 90% of international trade is carried out by sea, maritime transport is a major topic throughout the programme. This also stems from Marseille's DNA and its interconnection with local and international economic players - at the heart of the Fos Port and the greater Aix-Marseille economic hub. Special emphasis is also given to understanding and mastering CSR issues applied to the logistics industry, allowing graduates to make a significant impact on their organisations.
