Time to shake innovation

"How can companies work more closely with their strategic suppliers, bring their products to market faster and capture innovation? This MSc, addressing these questions, is recognised by multinationals as being at the leading edge of purchasing and innovation capture for new product development. It is designed for result-driven individuals who feel they are cut out to work in human communication and relationship building in an international environment."

HIGHLIGHTS

INTERNAL & EXTERNAL SKILLS

Within purchasing and innovation, value can be created both internally and externally. Students will be exposed to both spheres as part of their learning in the MSc. Skills and competencies developed during the programme include new product design, in-depth market knowledge, new technologies and all aspects of the purchasing process. Innovation and management are central to courses, empowering students to understand how to create, deliver and capture value from innovation.

A WORLD OF OPPORTUNITIES

The MAI offers an unrivalled professional network, both nationally and internationally. We provide our students with opportunities, networks and experiences for exciting careers in innovation and entrepreneurship. This is the result of close relationships with leading enterprises, which regularly contribute to the programme and enhance students' employability. It also draws on a community of 8,000 graduates, the only alumni community in Europe to include so many purchasing directors.

INTERNATIONAL EXPOSURE

The international element is central to ensure students learn across cultural boundaries and adopt different perspectives. Taught in English, courses feature top academics from leading global institutions and international experts. The MSc has international opportunities embedded throughout, resulting in a proven record of international employability. The student body is made up of 60% international students from 15 different nationalities - contributing to a truly global student experience.
